CASE INTRODUCTION—RECAP

For years he's used the name of Adobe to draw in his victims. He amassed a following of over 25,000 people. I was first approached by a woman on May 12, 2025 asking for my help regarding his dangerous behavior. A second woman messaged me back on June 23, 2025. After investigating for a couple hours I discovered his extensive criminal record and advised the woman to block him and ignore all further attempts by him to contact her.

A few days later two more women came to me about him. One pregnant and worried about keeping it secret so she is able to find work without being discriminated against. The other woman was conned out of money for a resume and wanted to know how I could help her get it back.

I reported him in July of 2025 with a detailed case to LinkedIn.

A fourth woman posted about being harassed by a man who called her continually and tried to force her to keep interacting with him. I read the comments and one woman asked was his first name Jeff. This fourth woman confirmed the first name and I immediately knew the last name, McDougal.

I messaged Rachel Johnson and told her to share her story. Nearly 500 likes, over 300 comments and hundred of profile reports and his profile remained. I made the case against him and a few days after it was banned.

Now, he wants the profile back.

Let's get started.

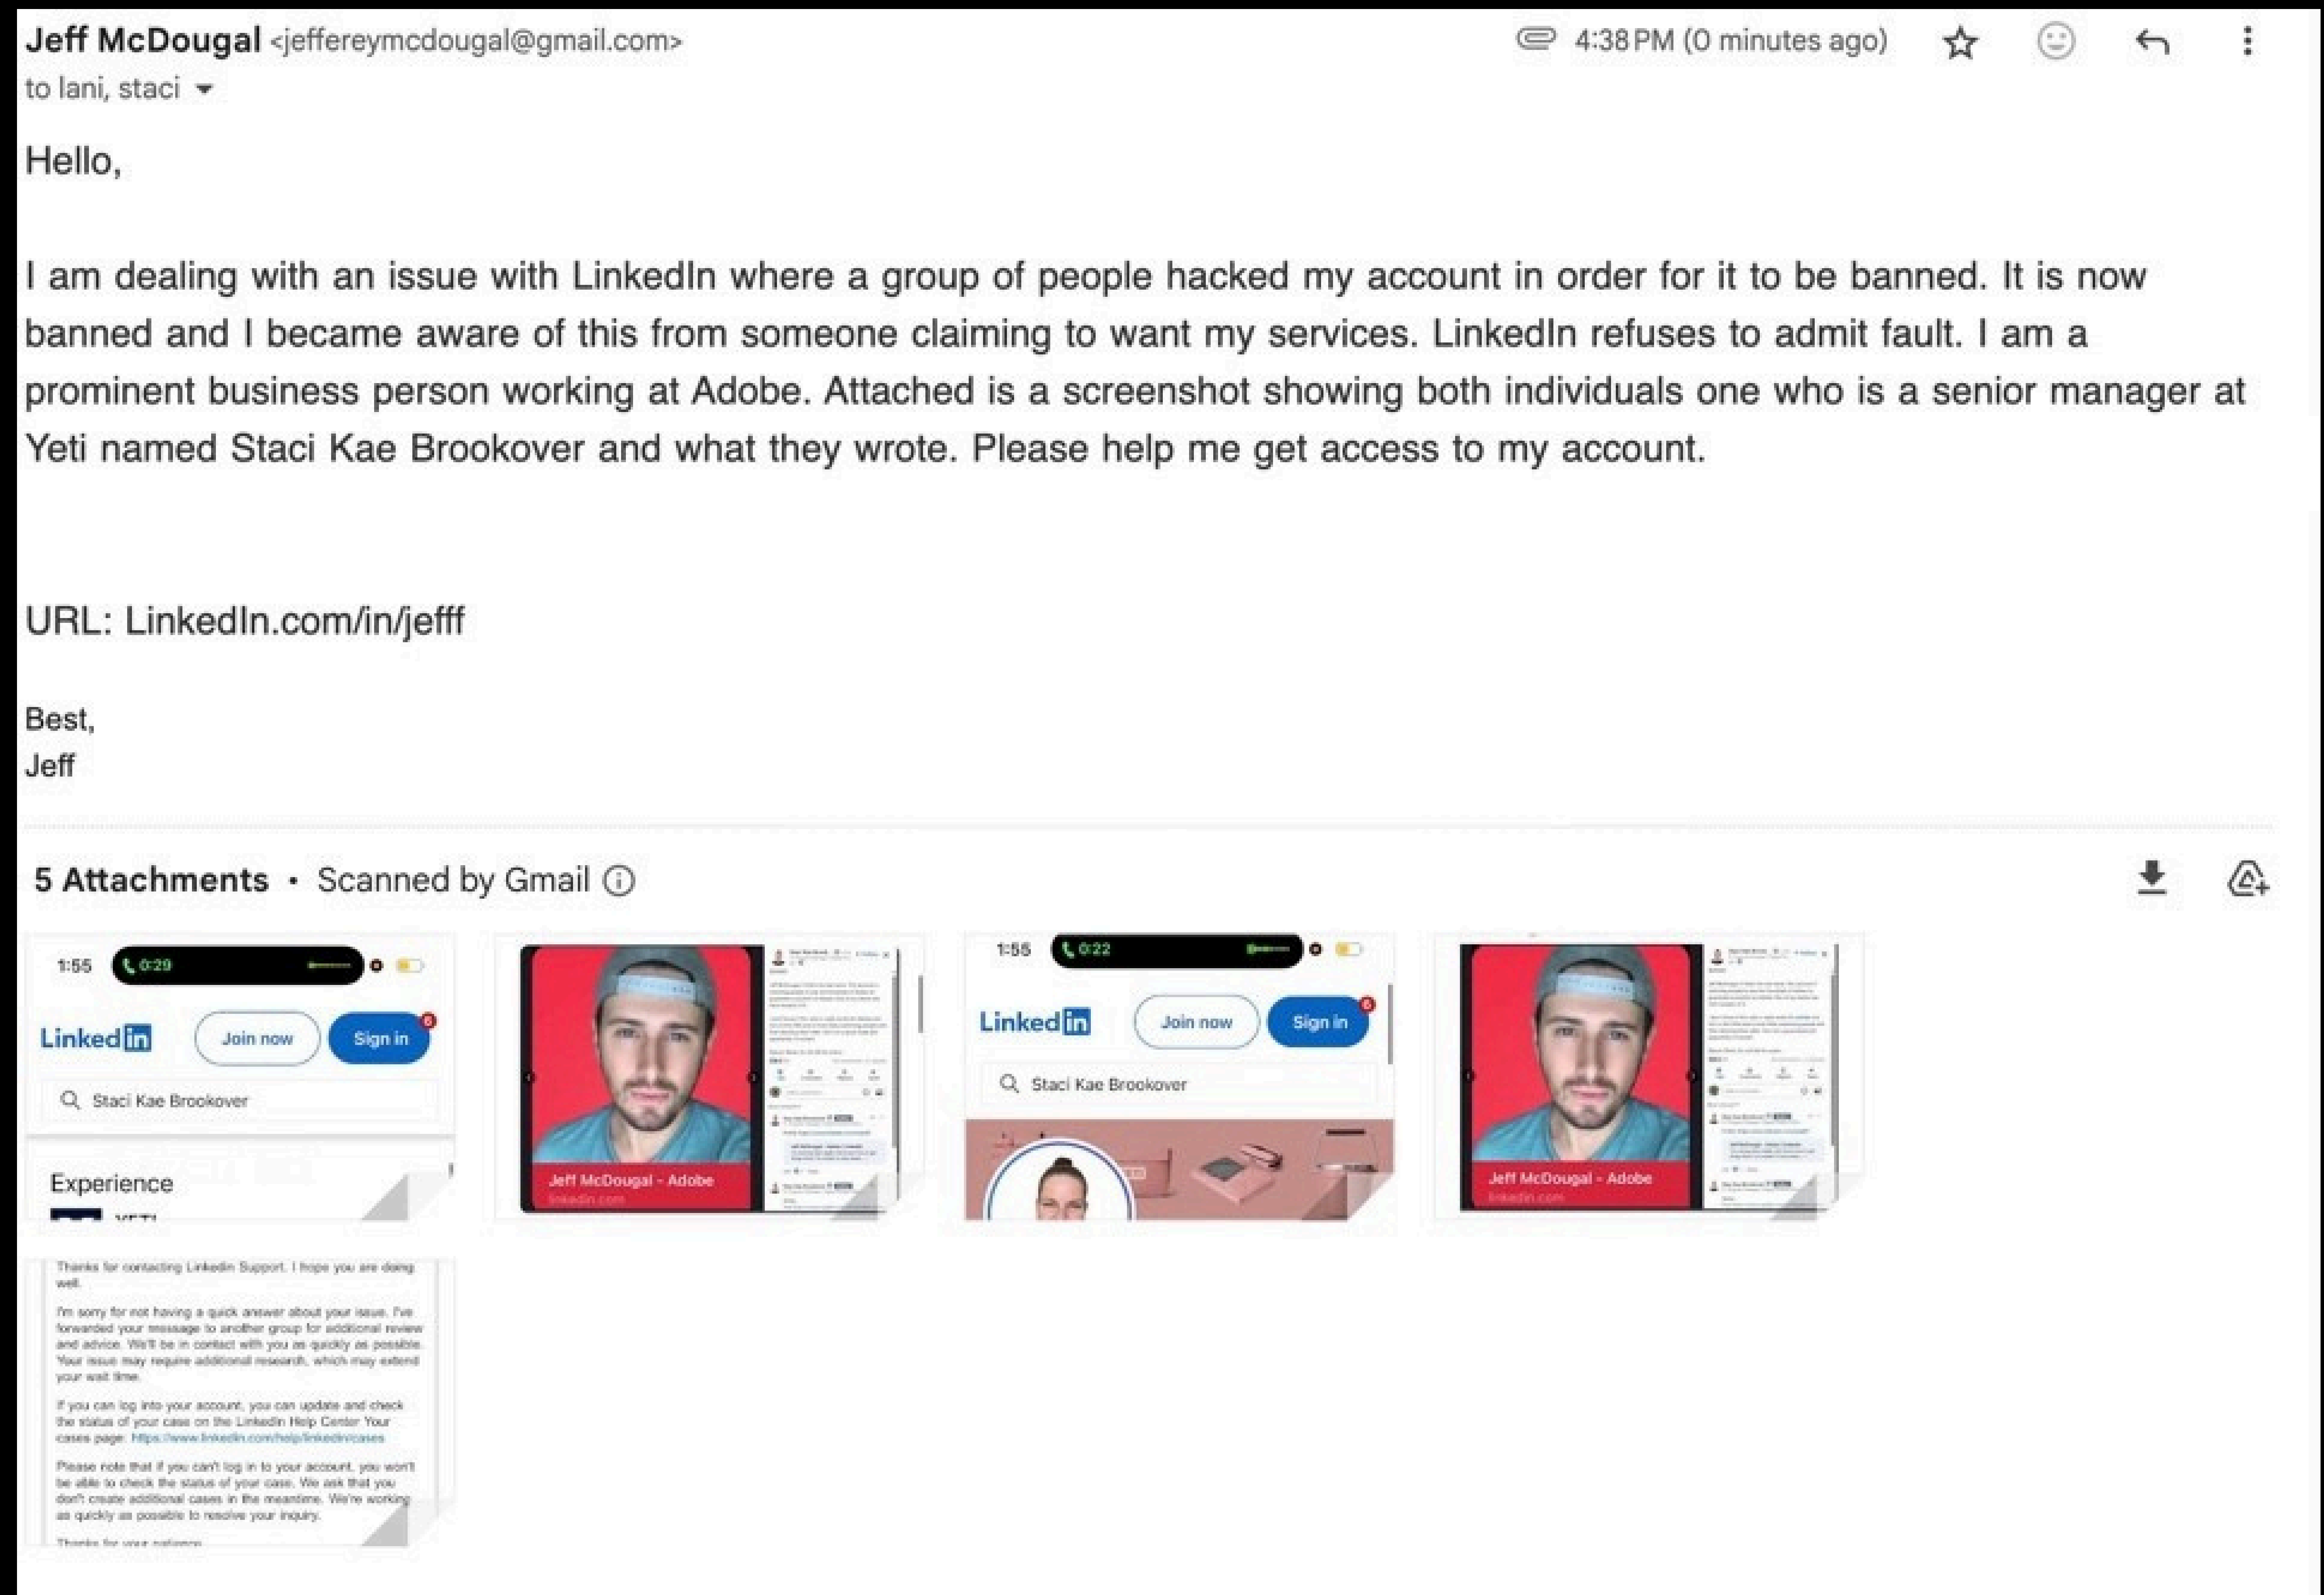

JEFF MCDUGAL—UNABLE TO HANDLE HIS PROFILE'S CHOKEPOINT

If you've followed me for awhile you've seen me say scammers do one of three things when they're caught:

1. Run
2. Try and fight back
3. Play the victim

They never EVER admit fault. I've seen thousands of fake profiles and scammers have gotten contentious and in the face of the truth they went down with the lies that made them money.

Jeffrey chose option 3, play the victim. It's DOCUMENTED the many women he scammed and was actively trying to scam when so many came forward with their firsthand experiences with him.

Being clear, his account was not hacked. My detailed case laying out the evidence of his scamming along with the pressure of people rightfully reporting him led to it being banned.

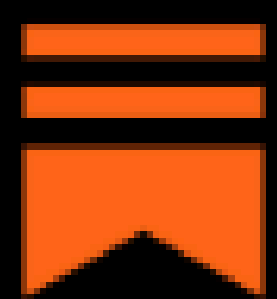

True to his M.O. of attacking women he goes after the two who posted. He avoids me because males like him know who to challenge and who not to. I despise any harm coming to children, women and the elderly. It won't be tolerated.

JEFF MCDUGAL—CONTINUED HARASSMENT OF WOMEN

Just yesterday another woman commented on what is now part one of the cases against Jeff McDougal. Her comment said she wanted me to DM her.

A PERMISSIBLE THREAT...

She said what you see on the right. She didn't want to be named out of fear for her safety. Jeff has the audacity to play the victim while being a continued victimizer. He won't change.

He's fighting to get the profile back to keep doing this behavior.

Concerning Jeff McDougal

Hey [REDACTED]

I saw your comment. What happened? He harass you as well or steal your money?

6:31 PM

Hey Jay! Luckily no he did not take any money from me. As soon as money came into the conversation I was concerned. However, he did send me a few emails after I told him to leave me alone so I am keeping an eye out. I [REDACTED] and am happy to help with this from the background if helpful. Just concerned for my personal safety since he has a violent history.

About

I'm a leader who's all about getting things done and helping my teams thrive. With experience in digital apps, marketing (both B2B and B2C), and management, I focus on making sure everyone on my teams feel supported and has what they need to succeed. I'm a big believer in listening to people, mentoring them, and stepping up to lead by example. I also adapt quickly when things change, and I'm comfortable navigating through uncertainty.

Over the years, I've built a solid track record of driving results and leading teams to success, especially in areas like enterprise software, app security, and tech integration. I'm really passionate about connecting different technologies, everything from marketplace apps to CRMs, analytics, and automation systems. Helping companies work smarter and more efficiently.

JEFF MCDOUGAL—THE SCAM DETAILED—RECAP

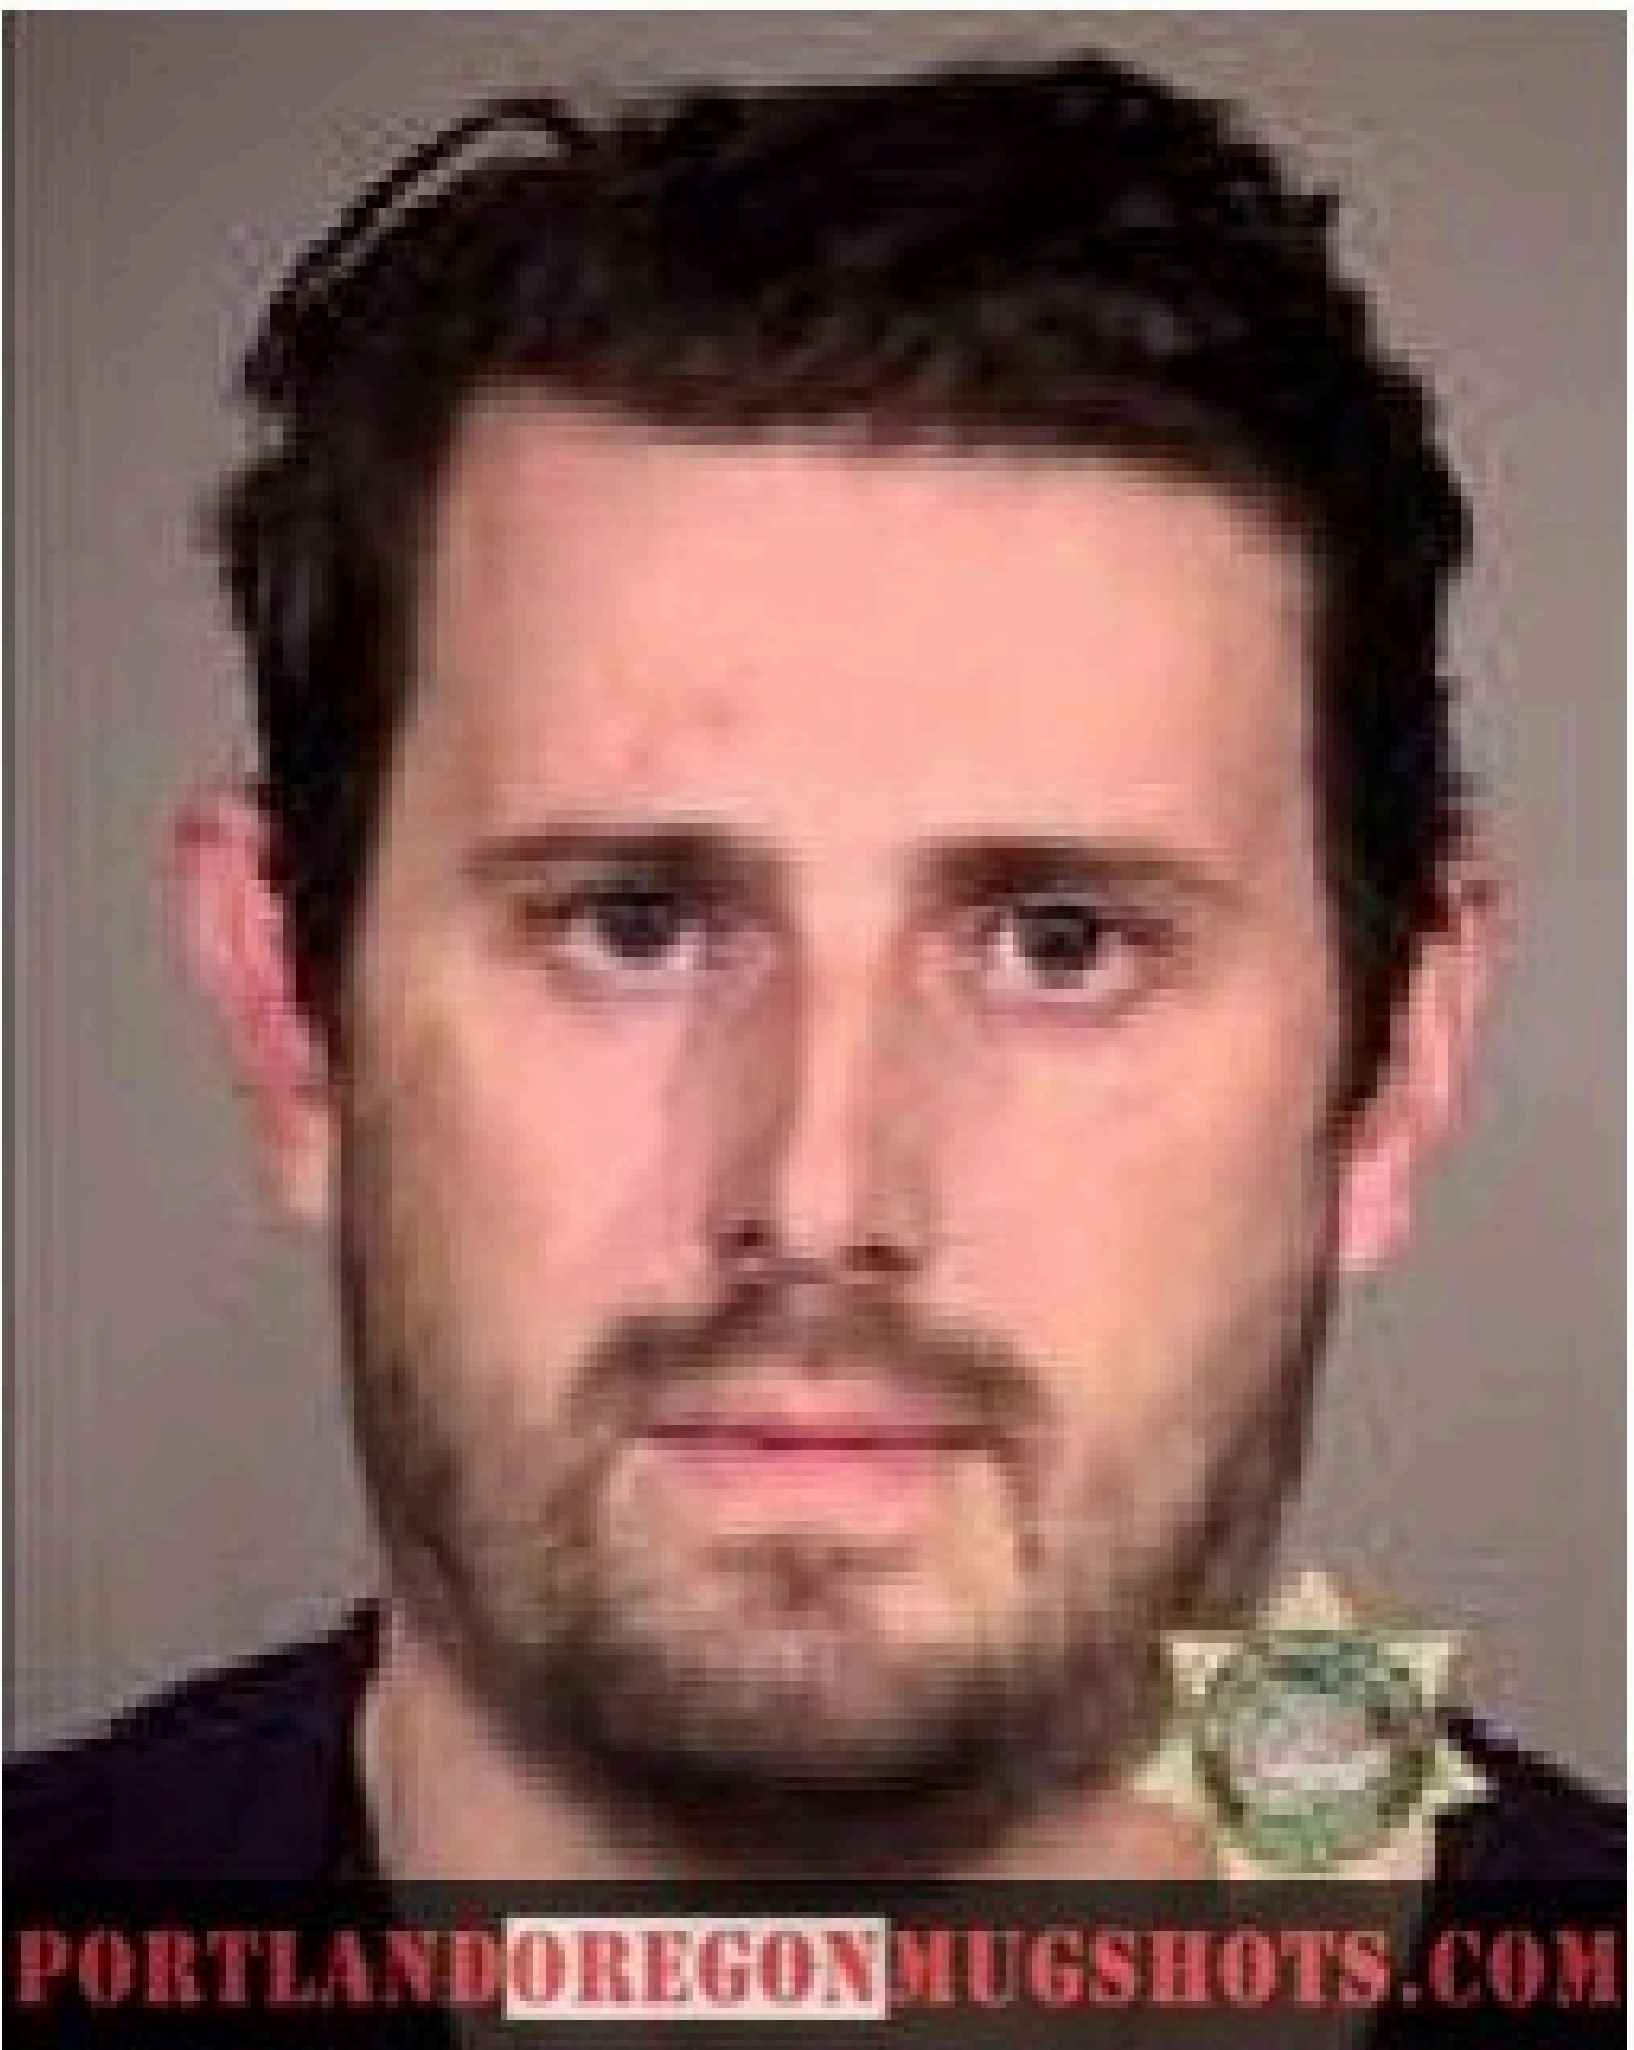

For over a year I’ve told you that scammers abuse the ease of profile creation to make themselves look legitimate. There aren’t any checks and balances in place for anyone on LinkedIn claiming to work at a company or attend a university. This is good in theory assuming every person on LinkedIn is an honest professional but as we know, there are hundred of thousands of fake profiles.

To be clear, Jeff did once work for Adobe but has not been employed by them for some time now. Yet he still has it listed on his profile.

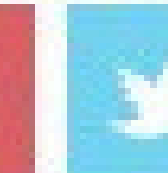

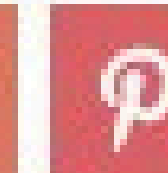

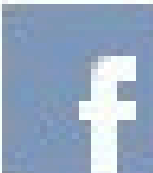

This well known company combined with his large amount of followers is alluring to job seekers. Using their hopes of finding work he tells them he has a “side business” as a resume writer and will help them get hired at Adobe. He then takes their money and blocks them so they can’t get it back.

He then moves onto the next victim.

Julie Brock I want to clarify that this individual is no longer employed at Adobe. As someone who works at the company, it saddens me deeply to see such hatred and unkindness being associated with our workplace. This rhetoric stands in complete opposition to my daily experience at Adobe, where I've found a culture built on respect, diversity, and inclusion. The views expressed do not reflect the values of the colleagues I'm proud to work alongside, nor the supportive environment we strive to maintain for everyone.

Santiago Sainz you know what saddens me. I've been trying to join Adobe... when I saw that a Director of Experience reached out to me I got so excited... "someone finally see's me". I've been unemployed for a couple months as a Senior Engineer (React/TypeScript).

He sent me a message, I got really excited... I read it and it's him offering a service to spruce up my resume.

A Scammer Got Me

Hi Jay,

I was recently approached by someone who I thought worked at Adobe. Everything seemed genuine, and they definitely preyed on the fact I'm open to work. I am waiting to make a dispute with my bank once the charge goes through on their end, and I've reported this person to PayPal.

They've blocked me here on LinkedIn and I have no way of contacting them. I wanted to see if there is any way you could help getting this scammer off of here.

He goes by Jeff McDougal and is just an awful person. This is his LinkedIn - <https://www.linkedin.com/in/jefff>

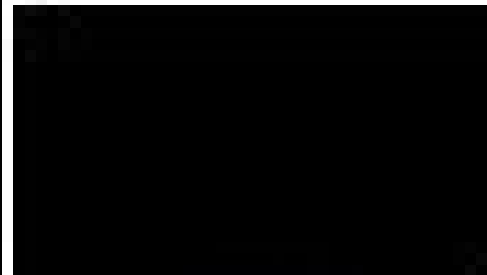

I guess he forgot that his profile is still completely visible when you're logged out of your LinkedIn account.

I've been a follower for a long time and I really appreciate seeing everything you do. I wish I was able to support you as a thank you for all you do.

Thank you in advance,

 JAY JONES, CPRW  • 8:14 AM

I think his profile was hijacked or he just lost his mind. He's not an Adobe employee anymore.

 ✓ • 9:22 AM

That's what I'm thinking. I did some research of people's experiences with him (Reddit posts, mostly, so I'm not certain at how credible), and it seems like he's lost his mind.

When I spoke to him, he was still claiming to be an executive at Adobe, mentioning he has ties to people at Disney and Universal - knowing that my long term career goal is to work with their parks

 JAY JONES, CPRW  • 9:24 AM

There was another woman who told me about him a few weeks ago and how he sent her messages regarding her pregnancy and how he lost his child and he said eff kids.

 ✓ • 2:26 PM

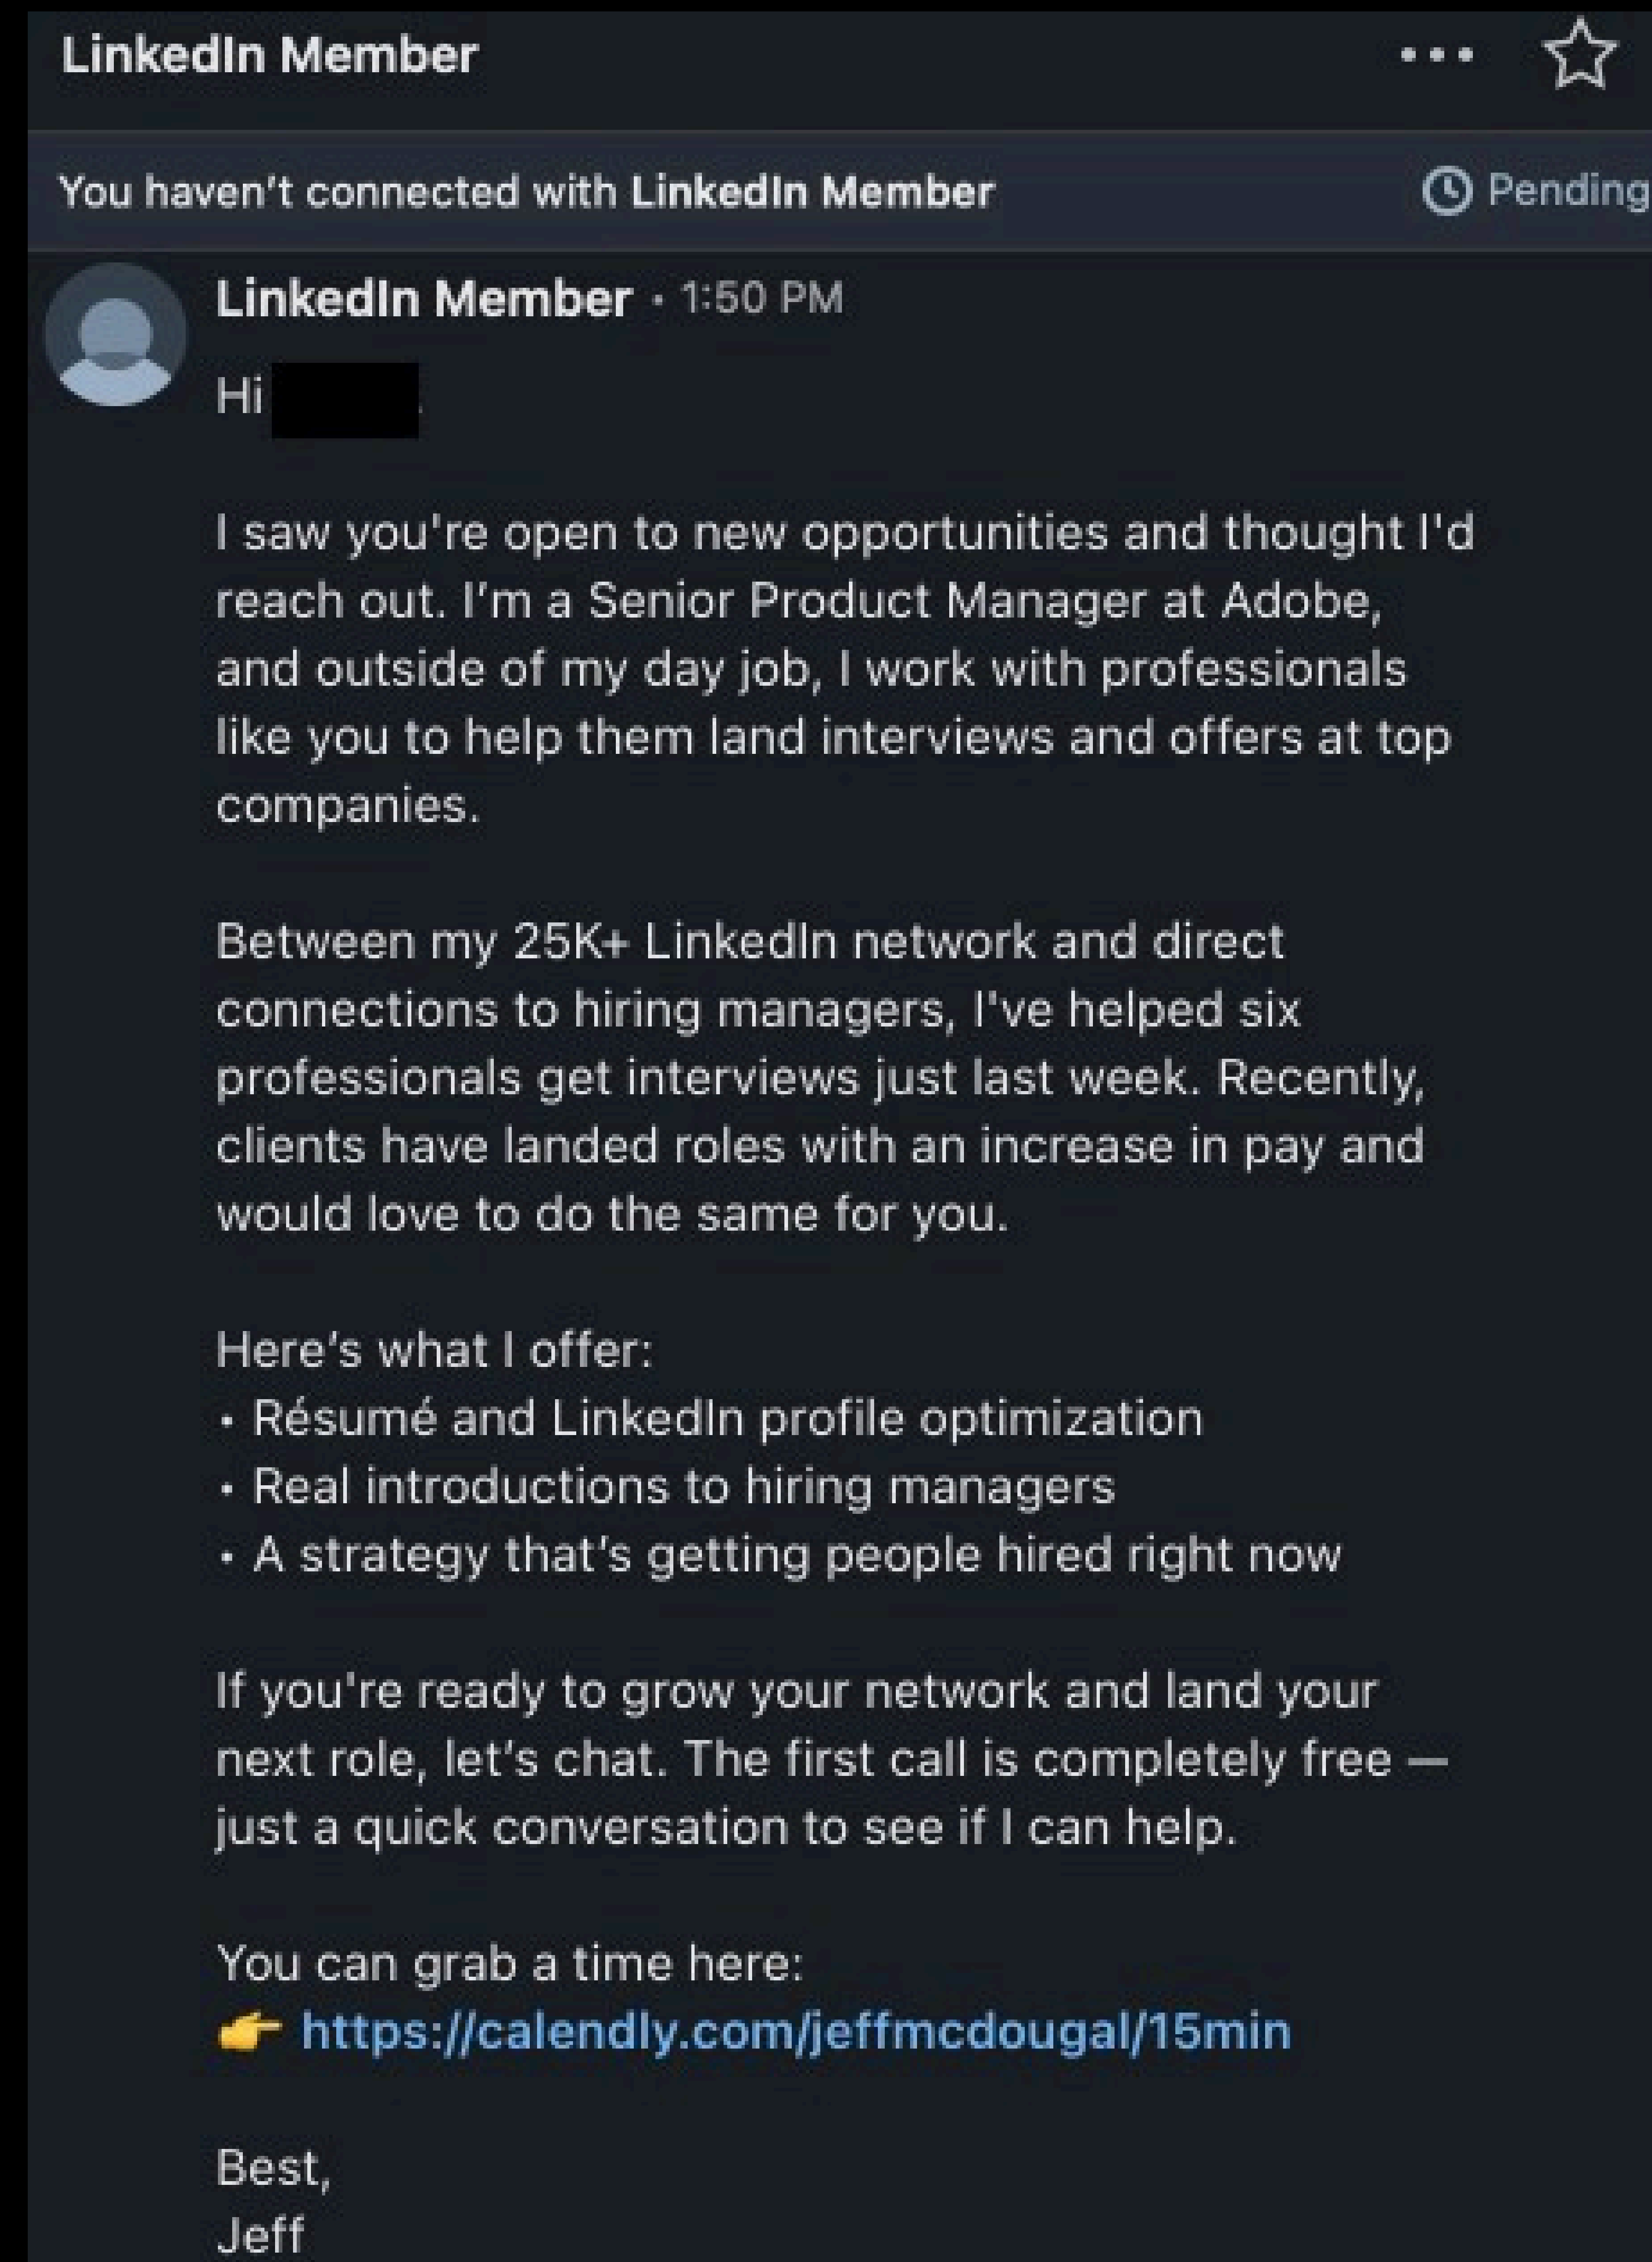

Oh my goodness!!!!!! What a creep!!! I'm keeping everything saved and documented, God forbid I have to Initially I thought his profile was hijacked but once I investigated and found his extensive criminal record with crimes against women, I knew Jeff was behind this harassing behavior to women and the scam.

Don't believe Jeff got a change of heart. He responded to Victim 3 because if a number of disputes are filed against a PayPal address it'll get flagged and taken down. He needs it up to keep the scam going.

I was scammed by someone named "Jeff McDougal," a fake profile with over 500 connections, thousands of followers, and what looked like credible recommendations.

Their profile said they worked for Adobe, they shared realistic resources, and nothing initially suggested they weren't legitimate.
But they were.

And I got burned.

This isn't just about one bad actor. It's about how easy it was for them to blend in here. It's about a platform that allows imposters to thrive, while real people like me, actively trying to connect, grow, and find work, are left vulnerable.

Today marks the last time I engage with LinkedIn.

I'm done.

Trust has been broken.

Support is nonexistent.

And frankly, the experience here has only added anxiety and disappointment to my life.

If you still want to stay in touch, feel free to DM me. I'm happy to share other ways to connect before I shut this account down. To those out there navigating this chaos: Be careful. Even the most "professional" looking profile may not be what it seems.

I wish this site had been what it promised.

I reported Jeff’s profile for misinformation as he claims to work for Adobe and doesn’t. LinkedIn allows a respondent 14 days to challenge a complaint. Which is fair, but the problem is they aren’t required to prove they (in this case) actually work at the company. They simply have to challenge the complaint and the case is closed...

Dear name,

We're very sorry that this issue has not been resolved as you'd hoped. We've made good faith attempts to notify the other member and inform you of any challenges we received. Unfortunately, LinkedIn is not able to resolve disputes between third parties and does not moderate or validate profile information based on individual claims.

We apologize for this inconvenience.

Hi, I understand your message, but am confused by it. This isn't a third-party conflict. He claims to work for Adobe and does not. Adobe confirmed it as well as another employee. He's using Adobe's name to trick people into thinking he has pull with getting them a job there, only to bait and switch them into getting a resume rewrite which he doesn't deliver. Also, all he has to do is contest the case of him not working for Adobe? That's not proof he works there, that sounds like all he has to do is say, "I do work for Adobe." And that's it? Case closed. That does a huge disservice to job seekers and keeps them in danger of being scammed by him. Please treat this matter urgently and delete his profile. Thank you, Jay

They said it themselves, LinkedIn does not moderate or validate profile information based on individual claims...

So....

CASE SUMMATION

He doesn't work for Adobe. They confirmed it.
He's banned and I'll see that it stays that way.
